Right away with the first wave movement in the 1900s, there was clarity that we as women need equal importance and a right to be seen. But have you ever wonder why women's empowerment is a social issue? It is important for people to understand what exactly women empowerment is. I believe that it means to support and to promote development for their economical as well as social development. With women empowerment, the goal is to bring the social and economic betterment of women all around the country. The core objective is to promote women's self-help groups to make them effective and efficient. In order to bring women empowerment, lots of changes are required in women's mobility, social interaction, Labour patterns, control over decision making and access to control over various resources.

We Women's always have to mark our journey and tell about our existence to the world. Empowering women all over the world especially in India is very necessary to bring gender equality. In fact, gender equality is very necessary to empower women. Gender equality is the first step to bring women empowerment in India without any biases. Just like women, men also need to understand their equal role in household chores and duties regarding their family. There are so many laws regarding empowering women but none of them are effective because they aren't followed by the people. It's not the responsibility of the Indian government only but also of the people living in the country.
